“Hey, are you going to sit out here while the rest of us are feasting on your cookies or will you join us?”

James asked as soon as he peeped through the door and caught a glimpse of Gabby sitting on a porch in the veranda, reminiscing.

“I will be in a minute. I was just seeing off a neighbor and decided to catch some air. Did you guys miss me?”

“No. Not really. We were just wondering where you had gone to for a while. Ok, we will be waiting for you inside. But when the cookies run out, don’t say I didn’t give you a heads-up.”

Gabby smiled and raised her glass of juice towards her former partner right before getting back into her deep-thought- state.

After that little chat with her new neighbor, Keith, Gabby found it difficult to focus for the rest of the party that she had hosted in honor of her new home. The things that Keith told her got to her and for a moment, she almost believed in one thing that she was raised to shun her entire life – superstition.

Gabby didn’t believe or care for superstition, but whatever it was that Keith told her made more sense than what she chose to believe. And everything in her moral fiber was telling her that there was something not so right about that new house, and she wanted to investigate it.

Will Gabby Macklemore make up her mind and get to search for this mystery? Will she just brush it off and continue living her life? Will she find whatever she is looking? Keep on reading to find out what happens.
