The Deadly Sting: The research of the assassination of Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin Natan Gefen

The book is the fruit of continuous research of the assassination of Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin. The interpretations and evaluations presented in this book are based on legal materials gathered in the case of Yigal Amir, on evidence presented in a number of the legal discussions at which the author was present, on evidence gathered by the Israeli police, on responses by parties involved parties in the affair, on explanations by various professionals, on documentary films and on journalistic reports in the written and digital media. As the interrogation began immediately after the assassination of Yitzhak Rabin a number of reports were identified as being inconsistent with the official version of the event. In those first days after the assassination these reports were made available only once before they disappeared from the public eye. When an editor of a prestigious newspaper approached a media gathering service (Yifat) in order to obtain this type of report, the company refused to supply the report while advising him to approach the source of the information. The suspicions raised in this book are actually the questions that arise while studying the information that ensconced the Israeli media, but were made unavailable, to say the least, to the public.
